stereotype

Andeep and Izzy both love being active.

One of them enjoys playing football and the other enjoys cheerleading.

Some people assumed that I'd join the school football club, but I actually prefer to do cheerleading. I love learning the routines and doing the lifts!

Some people assumed that I like cheerleading but my favourite sport is football. I've been playing it since I was little and I'm really good at scoring goals!

Izzy

Assumptions are ideas that people believe are true, even though there isn't any evidence to support them.

Andeep

Some people might make the assumption that boys like football and that girls like cheerleading, even though this isn't actually correct.

Stereotypes are unfair assumptions about a person or group of people, based on their characteristics.

Andeep and Izzy experienced gender stereotypes. In other words, people made assumptions about what they could or couldn't do based on whether they were a boy or girl. Sadly, stereotypes exist for lots of other characteristics, too.

Sometimes, I have experienced stereotypes around my disability. People wrongly make assumptions that I can't play sports because I'm a wheelchair user. The fact is that I can play many sports, and I'm brilliant at wheelchair basketball!

Anu's grandad

Sometimes, I have experienced stereotypes around my age. People wrongly make assumptions that I'm forgetful or that my brain has slowed down. The fact is that I'm very mentally active and love learning new skills - my favourite new hobby is playing chess!

Zeb's mum

Sometimes, I have experienced stereotypes around being pregnant. People wrongly make assumptions that I'm going to stop working to stay at home with the baby. The fact is, I love my job and I plan to work full-time when I return from maternity leave.

By identifying assumptions, we can begin to challenge stereotypes.

If people stop making assumptions, others will begin to feel valued and supported to achieve the things that they are capable of. When stereotypes are challenged, the world becomes a more inclusive place where people are celebrated for who they truly are.

Ms Hussain

When we challenge stereotypes, we should:

- stay calm and respectful
- explain why the assumption isn't fair
- give examples that show the stereotype isn't true
- speak to a trusted adult if we feel uncomfortable or unsafe

Remember, if someone says something based on unfair stereotypes that makes you feel upset, or if you see this happening to someone else, it's important to tell a trusted adult who can help. Everyone deserves to be treated fairly.

Read what happened to Jamal. Which strategies for challenging stereotypes did he use? Tick all that apply.

Jamal's older brother told him that boys don't cry. Jamal calmly explained, "That's not fair - everyone has feelings and it's healthy to express them. Even professional athletes cry sometimes." Jamal then spoke to his dad about what happened.
